

Children's Guide to Adoption Support

This book belongs to:

Children's Guide to Adoption Support

This is a booklet for children who are adopted. It will help you understand more about adoption, and it may also help answer any questions or worries that you may have about being adopted.

You can read this booklet with your parent(s) or another adult you trust and ask them anything that you are not sure of.

If you need this booklet in another language or format then please contact us at:

How you feel matters

As you are growing up there may be times when you don't understand something or when you would like some help with something that is worrying you.

You may be feeling upset and angry about something, or your head or tummy may be feeling all muddled up inside.

If you tell your parent(s) or another grown up whom you can trust about how you're feeling, they may be able to help you. If it is hard to find the words about how you are feeling or if you have any questions, worries or problems, you could write these down so that you can talk about them.

Who else can help?

The Adoption Support Team can talk to you and your family and help you understand your feelings. They can also give you any help and support that you and your family may need.

Everyone needs a bit of support sometimes, so it is okay to ask for a bit of help.....

The sorts of things you may need help with are:

- Understanding why you can't live with your birth family (the family that you were born into).
- Understanding your feelings if you are feeling sad, angry, upset, muddled or confused or unsure about how you feel.
- If you are having problems at school.
- If someone is hurting or bullying you.

Let's Talk More About Families!

There are all kinds of families, and children join their families in all sorts of ways. Some live with birth parents, aunts, uncles, grandparents or friends, some live with foster carers and some children are adopted.

What Does Adoption Mean?

Adoption means belonging to and growing up with a new family when you cannot live with the family you were born into.

Just like you, there are lots of other children all over the world who have been adopted. Hundreds of children are adopted every year. Some of these children are babies, some are older, some are adopted with their brothers and sisters, some are adopted from different countries into this country, and some are adopted by people they know like relatives and friends of the family.

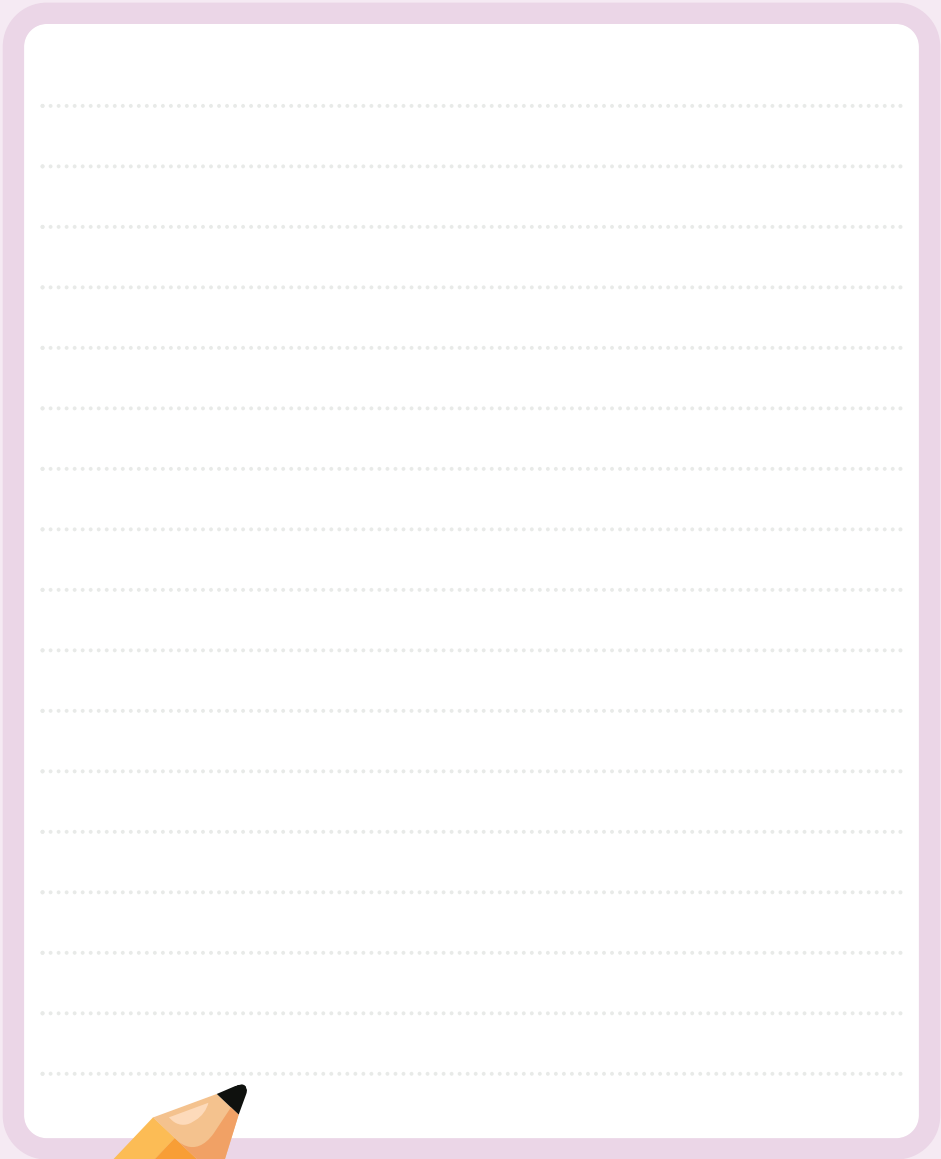

Adoption is very common and it is just another way of 'belonging' to a family.

Living in a new family can take a lot of getting used to and sometimes, even years after a child has been adopted, they may have lots of different questions that they may want to ask about being adopted.

Do you have any questions?

Perhaps you can write any questions that you may have here, or you can write them on another piece of paper if you like.

Here are some questions that other adopted children have asked:

Question: What do I tell people at school?

Answer: Some people want to tell everyone they meet that they are adopted, and some people don't want to tell anyone. You can choose to tell whoever you would like about your adoption, and how much you tell them is up to you. Always remember though, that it is your information and once you have shared things about yourself, you can't take back what you have said. So only tell people that you feel you can trust.

Question: Can I meet other adopted children?

Answer: Yes of course you can. You and your family can go along to fun days organised by Adoption@Heart and to groups which are arranged for adopted children. You can get together and make new friends and have lots of support from each other.

Question: How do I find out more about why I was adopted?

Answer: You will have a life story book to look at and when you are a little older, a later life letter. These will help you understand more about your life before you were adopted.

Question: Can I talk to my adoptive parents about my birth family?

Answer: Yes, of course you can. Your adoptive parents will understand that you may sometimes want to talk about your birth family. They will listen to you and if you have any questions about your birth family that they are not able to answer, or answers which can't be found in your life story book or later life letter, they can help you contact the Adoption Support Team to see if the Adoption Social Workers there may be able to help.

adoptive parents will understand that you will want to talk about your birth family from time to time, so that's okay.

Do you have any further questions or is there anything that you would like others to know about you, like your teacher?

You can write about anything you would like help with or let people know some things about you or how you are feeling on the following pages. You can ask your adoptive parents to help you, or another grown up that you trust if you wish.

There is also a useful information page that you can give to your teacher which tells them about adoption and how to help adopted children in school.
